BITCOIN FOR THE ARTS × DREAM GRAD ACADEMY

Sound money, taught in many voices.

Prepared for Dr. Emma Apatu, founder of Dream Grad Academy, following our conversation in November 2026. Here are five ways our two programs could support each other, starting with what we can do this month.

WHY WE ARE REACHING OUT

Bitcoin for the Arts is a 501(c)(3) nonprofit that supports artists with Bitcoin grants, education, and sovereign funding tools. This fall we launched a four-class sound money series, starting with What Is Money? It begins with the principles of money and barter, then leads into Bitcoin.

We believe this education reaches the most people when it is taught by many trusted voices, each in their own community. Our first facilitator, artist Monika Bravo, recorded What Is Money? in her own voice and opened it with her own introduction. That recording is now our model for every facilitator who teaches with us.

Your work shows why this matters. You already teach Bitcoin to health students, from lecture halls of 40 to 50 people to evening sessions. You see Bitcoin as a health promotion tool, and you are building a health systems innovation hub. Your article, The Invisible Health Tax, explains how our money affects our health. Artists and health workers need the same thing: a clear way to understand sound money, and to explain it to the people who trust them.

WHAT EACH OF US BRINGS

BITCOIN FOR THE ARTS

- A sound money curriculum, published free under Creative Commons
- A facilitator model, with a recorded example to follow
- A network of working artists and Bitcoin creators
- A weekly newsletter, a podcast, and live webinars
- Grants and programming as a U.S. nonprofit

DREAM GRAD ACADEMY

- Direct access to university students in health
- A health promotion lens on sound money
- Partnerships with My First Bitcoin and Bitcoin Mentor
- A health systems innovation hub in development
- A new voice and a new generation of learners

THE IDEA IN ONE LINE

Artists and health workers are both trusted messengers. If we teach them sound money together, they can carry it into studios, clinics, and classrooms we could never reach alone.

FIVE WAYS TO WORK TOGETHER

NOW · NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER 2026 — Easy to start this month

01 Teach What Is Money? in your own voice

Following Monika Bravo's model, you record the class in your own voice, open it with your own introduction, and share it with your students and community. Bitcoin for the Arts lists you as a facilitator. The materials are licensed CC BY 4.0, so you can adapt them for a health audience with credit to Bitcoin for the Arts.

02 Join us on Share Your Bitcoin Journey

An episode of our interview show on how you brought Bitcoin into public health. It introduces you to our audience before you teach them, and it gives your students something to share.

WINTER · JANUARY TO MARCH 2027 — Build something together

03 A guest class: The Invisible Health Tax

You adapt your lecture for artists, and we host it as a session in our education series. Most artists have never heard Bitcoin explained as a health issue. Your perspective adds a layer no one else in our program can.

04 Art that helps health students explain Bitcoin

Your students find it hard to explain Bitcoin to patients and their communities, and art can be the starting point. We pair an artist from our network with your students to create visuals they can use in the clinic and the classroom. Bitcoin for the Arts would look to support the artist as a program project, with scope and budget set together.

SPRING AND SUMMER · 2027 — Grow with your innovation hub

05 A sound money module in your summer program

When your health systems innovation hub launches, What Is Money? becomes a session in the summer experience, and could count toward the certificate. Bitcoin for the Arts can also write a letter of support for your 2027 grant applications describing this collaboration.

SUGGESTED NEXT STEPS

1. Dion sends the What Is Money? slides, the facilitator recording, and our meeting notes.
2. Emma reviews the class and shares feedback on how it would land with a health audience.
3. We choose one or two ideas to start with. We suggest 01 and 02, which can begin this month.
4. Emma shares the innovation hub one-pager when it is ready, early in 2027, and we plan the spring together.

WHY THIS MATTERS

Money that cannot be printed away lets people plan for the long term: their savings, their health, their community. We would be proud to teach that side by side with Dream Grad Academy.
